Long Day of Flight

Together, we stand up
for human rights, solidarity, and a society that leaves no one behind.

For people in need.
For all of us.

Meeting
point: Stock-im-Eisen-Platz
corner of Kärntner Straße

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.

Article 1 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Why are we here today?

Core democratic values around the world are under increasing pressure. The tone towards people in need is becoming harsher and human rights are being called into question, including in Europe and right here in Austria.

We draw a clear line.

Human rights are not open to political debate. They form the foundation of a free, democratic, and supportive society, protecting every single one of us. Restricting the rights of those seeking safety undermines the freedom and security of the entire community.

Human rights shape our daily lives.

They go far beyond the right to asylum and protection, guaranteeing access to education, family life, accessibility for people with disabilities, social security, and fair living conditions. These rights belong to all of us, and we are here to ensure they remain intact.

Join us!

Along Kärntner Straße, we will form a red line for humanity. By holding a 200-meter-long red ribbon, we will show visually what holds our society together: standing up to protect human rights.

This red line doesn't divide us – it connects us.

Human rights provide the basis for all conversation. In a healthy democracy, we can disagree, debate, and challenge ideas, as long as we treat one another with respect. Democracy thrives on open debate, but not on stripping someone of their dignity.

What are human rights?

Every person everywhere is entitled to the same fundamental rights - regardless of their origin, gender, religion, or age.

These rights form the foundation for a free and dignified life. They apply at all times, to everyone.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by the United Nations in 1948 in response to the atrocities of World War II and the Holocaust.

How can you help?

Solidarity grows when people stand up for one another and take action together. Register for free at: www.fuereinand.at
